Christine Thompson helps individuals obtain fair and just compensation for their traumatic injuries caused by the negligent actions of others.

Christine R. Thompson concentrates her practice on representing plaintiffs in medical malpractice, class action, product liability, motor vehicle, food poisoning, and other personal injury actions involving traumatic injuries. Ms. Thompson assists clients in all phases of the litigation process, from intake to serving as co-counsel at mediations and at trial.

She coordinates large-scale document reviews, and regularly drafts demand letters, motions, and discovery documents. Ms. Thompson is skilled in using technology, including document automation and expert systems, to provide efficient, effective legal services to clients.

Ms. Thompson received her B.A. from Wellesley College and her J.D., cum laude, from Suffolk University Law School. While at Suffolk Law, Ms. Thompson was the Executive Editor of Transnational Law Review. She also won multiple academic awards at Suffolk Law, including two Jurisprudence Awards, which are given to the person receiving the highest grade in a law school section.

She has spent extensive time in Mexico and Argentina and is proficient in Spanish.
